Financial Requirements Overview

What you need to evidence for a Visitor Visa - there's no fixed minimum balance

VERIFY BEFORE YOU APPLY

Fees, forms, and processing times change without notice. This guide reflects publicly documented procedures as commonly published; treat every dollar figure, form number, and timeline here as a starting point, and confirm the current version on the official government site before you submit anything or pay any fee.

There's no fixed published minimum

Like several other visitor routes, the Australian Visitor visa (Tourist stream) has no fixed minimum bank balance set out in the Migration Regulations. What matters is whether your evidence, together with the rest of your application, satisfies the case officer that you can support yourself for the trip without working in Australia, and that you're a genuine temporary entrant.

What sufficient funds means in practice

- Enough to cover accommodation, subsistence, and activities for the length of your stay
- Consistent with your stated income and travel plans - a lengthy, expensive trip funded by a thin, static account looks inconsistent
- If a third party is covering costs, clear evidence of that arrangement and their own means

Acceptable evidence

- Bank statements covering a reasonable recent period, not a single-day snapshot
- Pay slips or an employer letter confirming income
- Savings, fixed deposits, or investment statements
- A sponsor's financial evidence plus a signed letter, if someone else is funding the trip

Red flags

- A large, recent, unexplained deposit shortly before applying
- A balance inconsistent with the applicant's stated occupation or income
- Financial evidence that covers the trip on paper but leaves no plausible means afterward
